SIGATOKA SAND DUNES NATIONAL PARK

WORLD HERITAGE SITE
TENTATIVE LIST

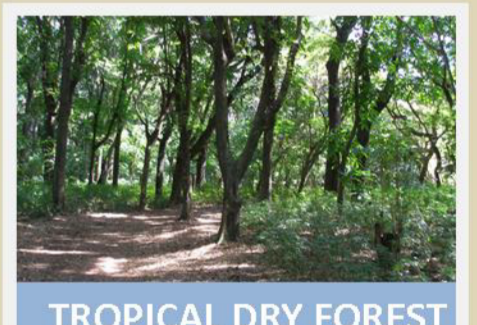

The Sigatoka Sand Dunes stands out as one of the most unique natural wonders of the Fiji Islands. This distinctive landscape covers an area of 650 acres, of which 390 acres was reserved as Fiji's first National Park in 1989. Composed with metallic magnetic minerals and biogenic materials, these parabolic sand dunes are results of thousands of years of sedimentation from the Sigatoka River. Hidden underneath the sand and vast diversity of plants and animals that survive in the Park, is Fiji's most outstanding proof of our ancestors' historical migration through the Pacific. This rich combination of geomorphological, ecological and cultural attributes make the park an excellent center for recreation, research and education.
